

Dark-eyed Junco

Total collected by FLAP volunteers – 1,452 between 1993 & Spring 2006

A widespread and common small sparrow, the Dark-eyed Junco is most familiar as a winter visitor to bird feeders. It comes in several distinctly different looking forms, but all are readily identified as “juncos” by their plain patterning, dark hood, and white outer tail feathers.

credit: Carol L. Edwards

