

Northern Flicker

Total collected by FLAP volunteers – 304 between 1993 & Spring 2006

A common ant-eating woodpecker of open areas, the Northern Flicker has two colour forms found in different regions. The yellow-shafted form is common across the eastern and northern parts of North America, while the red-shafted form is the one found in the West. Conservation Status: widespread and common, but populations declining.
