Summary

The City of Toronto will establish an Indigenous Affairs Office within the City Manager's Office. The Indigenous Affairs Office will report directly to the City Manager, with an administrative reporting relationship to the Director, Equity, Diversity and Human Rights for the purposes of budget, timekeeping and administrative support. In this report, the term 'Indigenous' is used to refer to the First Nations, Métis and Inuit communities.

A survey of City divisions indicates several are engaged in initiatives related to Indigenous affairs and a number have staff positions that are assigned to related portfolios. While the City remains committed to embedding responsibility for Indigenous priorities within divisions, the City recognizes the need for a centralized Indigenous Affairs Office in the City Manager's Office to, among other things:

- strengthen the City's relationship with Indigenous communities;
- develop and implement a reconciliation framework/strategy for the City;
- support City divisions in the development and implementation of reconciliation initiatives and provision of subject matter expertise, including to support conversations with other orders of government;
- assist in the development of Indigenous cultural competency training and related education for the Toronto Public Service;

- support the Aboriginal Affairs Committee;
- track and report on the City's progress in responding to the eight Truth and Reconciliation Priority Calls to Action adopted by the City;
- ensure that the City's work with Indigenous communities is in accordance with the City's Statement of Commitment to the Aboriginal Communities of Toronto;
- promote Indigenous civic participation and inclusion in the City's decision making processes;
- support Indigenous cultural events at the City; and
- secure funding for Indigenous related initiatives.
