CABR Advisory Committee

Council Advisory Bodies

- City Council establishes Council Advisory Bodies (CABs) such as the Confronting Anti-Black Racism (CABR) advisory committee during the Council term to provide advice and assist its decision-making.
- A CAB provides advice through Council's Standing Committees often with reference to input from the public, various sectors and industries, and stakeholders on key policy matters.
- CABs do not deliver services, direct the City's public service or make binding decisions on behalf of the City of Toronto.
- The member composition of CABs includes Members of Council and at least 50% public members appointed by City Council. City staff are not members of CABs.
- Similar to bodies that advise Council, there are also program advisory bodies that advise City staff, who in turn bring recommendations forward to City Council. These members are not appointed by Council and are engaged by City staff as required. An example is the Partnership & Accountability Circle who provide advice to city staff on the CABR action plan.

Current Council Advisory Bodies:

- Aboriginal Affairs Advisory Committee
- Confronting Anti-Black Racism (CABR) Advisory Committee
- Film, Television and Digital Media Board
- Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer & Two-Spirit (LGBTQ2S+)
- Toronto Accessibility Advisory Committee
(established under the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act, 2005)

Accountability Officers

- The City of Toronto has four accountability officers that help ensure our government remains open and transparent.
- The City's accountability offices were instituted over a number of years, starting with the Auditor General in 2002, followed by the Integrity Commissioner in 2004. After the Province of Ontario granted further oversight authority, the City put in place the final elements of its accountability framework with the establishment of the Lobbyist Registrar in 2007 and the Ombudsman in 2008.

Mandate of Toronto's Accountability Officers

- Provide objective and independent oversight to ensure the transparency and accountability of Toronto's government.
- Each officer has a specific mandate and role set out in law to advance transparency and accountability at the City.
- Toronto's Municipal Code, Chapter 3, Accountability Officer sets out the Officers' governance framework within the City including their features of independence and accountability to City Council.
