I'm writing to express my support for keeping and restoring the former Post Office building at 1117 Queen West.

Whatever adaptive reuse of this building happens, it should most importantly be a community building facility, where people can gather and re-generate. This can be some sort of community art space, whether it be a performing arts or music facility that would bring people together.

Demolishing this building would be an admission that Toronto has given up trying to be imaginative. We must continue to build on cultural strengths and at the same time save historic streetscapes that engage our community to dream boldly for its future while honouring its past.

Chi-miigwech and Salaam,
