Summary

Canada and the United States (US) have one of the world's most integrated and successful economic relationships. Trade between the two countries has driven decades of sustained economic growth, creating jobs and generating wealth. A more protectionist posture by the new US administration and a series of economic policy announcements, including tariffs and rising to the threat of the annexation of Canada, have shattered the confidence of Canadians in this economic union, upon which the Canadian economy has long relied. While the application of tariffs presents the immediate threat, the deep uncertainty and the risk of a new US political consensus in favour of economic nationalism, pose long-term threats to Toronto's economy.

As Canada and Ontario's economic engine, Toronto has a critical interest in protecting its businesses, workers and residents while building greater long-term economic resilience. This report presents the Mayor's Economic Action Plan in Response to US Tariffs, outlining the City of Toronto's immediate response to the potential impacts from the US' volatile economic policies. The Plan details ten (10) immediate actions to be implemented over the next 30 days to ensure Toronto remains resilient amidst economic adversity while continuing to build a strong and diversified economy to enable growth with a commitment to return to Council with additional measures in future.
