The Preeminent Conference for Urban Decision-Makers

How do the greatest cities succeed? This July 18-19, join experts from The New York Times as they convene the world's foremost thinkers, policymakers, developers, entrepreneurs, industry stars and others at Cities for Tomorrow, the must-attend event for leaders who are shaping the urban environments of the future.

Together, this illustrious group will identify and assess the winning formulas that lead to flourishing cities, from the transformative power of culinary centers to new approaches to transportation; from innovative models of public/private partnerships to novel solutions to education challenges; from evolving leadership imperatives to fresh approaches to entrepreneurship – and much more on what will make a good city great.

Hosted by New York Times senior editor Charles Duhigg and Big City columnist Ginia Bellafante, Cities for Tomorrow will feature the high-level analysis that only The New York Times can deliver through discussions with the fascinating figures who are driving seminal urban change.
