- Support the City's strategic priorities to increase economic vitality, create jobs and generate investment in Toronto.

Why Los Angeles?

In a fiercely competitive global climate it is essential for Toronto to remain a top contender with Los Angeles-based studios and to frequently take time to meet with its key stakeholders. Since the last mission to Los Angeles in April of 2018, studio footprint expansions have been announced (over 500,000 square feet in the next two years are coming online in the city with more in the works, as well as another equal amount just outside the boundaries of Toronto), creating a higher volume of space to attract production to Toronto in the next few years. Parallel to that, the industry will need to grow to respond to this market demand and be staffed appropriately for this growth. Updates on both infrastructure and workforce growth are going to be central to this Mission.

The objectives for the May 2019 mission will focus on three key areas: celebrating and highlighting the achievements of the past year, building on existing relationships with physical, post-production decision-makers, and engage with key creators while highlighting the city's concrete growth plans. The ultimate goal is to build on the City and Toronto screen industry's renowned commitment and responsiveness to its investors and point to our capacity and readiness to absorb the industrial growth of this golden age of content creation.

The mission will solicit new business across established and emerging production platforms with the people who make final decisions on the choice of jurisdiction on their projects. Toronto will benefit by extending its relationships and presenting a unified community with diverse talents in the face of competition from other cities throughout North America.

The sectors of interest in this Mission are:

- Film/Television/Digital Media
